

Saving videos from YouTube, Spiegel etc.

Saturday, 24 May 2008

Last Updated Saturday, 24 May 2008

There's a lot of popular German music available as {mosbookmarks:bm=98} videos. Go to YouTube and put the name of any current band into the search box and one will find a mixture of official clips, taped TV broadcast extracts and live concert recordings. Not all legal, of course.

```
{jumi [includes/googleads.php]}
```

These videos are streamed and if one is to save them to use with a class in a room with no Internet connection, extra tools are needed. There are a few different ways of doing this, but possibly the easiest is to use the {mosbookmarks:bm=99} browser with the {mosbookmarks:bm=100} extension installed.

When you are on a website with a video, the Downloadhelper icon lights up and spins. Click on the down-arrow beside the icon, and you can select the file and save it to disk. One nice thing about this extension is that the .flv filename extension is there automatically. The file will now play in any {mosbookmarks:bm=101} software.

Another useful tool is {mosbookmarks:bm=102} for saving the sound from a video as an MP3 file.